

Tragedy of Love (SHORT STORIES) (Volume 1)

POTTER and his bride walked sheepishly and with speed. Sometimes they laughed together shamefacedly and low. Next corner, dear, he said finally. They put forth the efforts of a pair walking bowed against a strong wind. Potter was about to raise a finger to point the first appearance of the new home when, as they circled the corner, they came face to face with a man in a maroon-colored shirt who was feverishly pushing cartridges into a large revolver. Upon the instant the man dropped his revolver to the ground, and, like lightning, whipped another from its holster. The second weapon was aimed at the bridegrooms chest. There was silence. Potters mouth seemed to be merely a grave for his tongue. He exhibited an instinct to at once loosen his arm from the womans grip, and he dropped the bag to the sand. As for the bride, her face had gone as yellow as old cloth. She was a slave to hideous rites gazing at the apparitional snake. The two men faced each other at a distance of three paces. He of the revolver smiled with a new and quiet ferocity. Tried to sneak up on me, he said. Tried to sneak up on me! His eyes grew more baleful. As Potter made a slight movement, the man thrust his revolver venomously forward. No, dont you do it, Jack Potter. Dont you move a finger toward a gun just yet. Dont you move an eyelash. The time has come for me to settle with you, and Im goin to do it my own way and loaf along with no interferin. So if you dont want a gun bent on you, just mind what I tell you.
