

Letters From the Old Glory Box

A rich account of life in rural North Carolina during and soon after WWI, as told through personal letters written between 1916 and 1920. The story of the Hopkins-Strickland families and their friends has all the elements of a book that you won't want to put down: - romance, as young men and women are vying for each other's affections- boys sent off to fight in WWI; some not returning- the Spanish Influenza pandemic comes to North Carolina - undisguised adoration by one woman for another- use of local vernacular and colloquialisms of the day- a look at the culture & day to day lives of a rural community during that time. The final letter in the collection, written on February 14, 1920, provides a wonderfully romantic ending: a proposal of marriage in the form of a 4-line poem at the end of the letter. Part 1 of the book provides historical background about the people, places and events that appear in the letters; the letters, about 100 in total, are transcribed in Part 2.
